

Europe: From abundance to weariness? when comes the turn ?

Reinhold Kiehl grew up in the bombed Ludwigshafen: with 4 persons in one room under the roof of a still „standing“ french barrack, without toilet. He worked very hardly with his parents, brothers and sisters, friends and the spared (remaining) war company for the rebuilding of the postwar Germany from 0 to again, which is because of the soil, to the world-wide noted economic miracle “made in Germany”:

Busily with newspaper delivering in the deepest snow, or in the rain, in outside firms of the BASF with climbing and creep exercises with the distribution of contact granulates in sulfuric acid catalyst towers, stacking of hundredweight bags on pallets, assistance with wall compilation with burned clay bricks and broken wound hands, in foundries with weld-rubbing production of sandforms for metal parts, continuous production/shift work in breweries with the filling of beer in bottles into boxes, distribution in restaurants...compensation at school and sports club, on the road, in ruins with brothers and sisters and friends...with iron discipline and renunciation, with help for others...still fighter in the spirit of this postwar company, with education of his own children in the sense of this departure company, with students in logical instructions, at present in the oversize confronted with an over-adjusted full weariness and fun company... will bring in his own opinion, experience and realization for the management of that our worst depression in the over 50 years now united Germany for the accomplishment of our deep recession.
